OBSERVER'S NOTES.

Sartor Resartus, meaning the reviewer reviewed, is the name of a celebrated book by Thomas Carlyle.

We notice that those notes refer entirely to a number of northern people who came to this county. That they were not written by a northern man. There is only a thin skin concealing the identity of the writer. Did you get any of it by "skinning" northern people, Mr. Observer?

We might add a little to the notes. Although he had poor health, Dr. Bishop rode here on horseback from Ohio. His family came later. His son, Otis, taught school at Crab Orchard.

The first Mrs. Bennett died at their home at Biglick. She was Amy Bennett's mother. Burton S. and Charles, and Bethana and Phoebe Andrews were all brothers and sisters. They came from Minnesota. Phoebe was married in Crossville to O. W. Perkins, who became Clerk and Master, and improved and built a home on what is now the A. L. Garrison place.

Dr. Oliver Chamberlain and family came from Illinois, and, later, went to Florida. Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain died several years ago.

L. H. Bell, though a part of his life has been strenuous, never had good health. His life has been prolonged by coming here. His three children are in the west: Clarence at Carlsbad, New Mexico, Ernest at Los Angeles, and Florence, now Mrs. J. E. Thornton, at Riverside, California. Mr. Bell was not the first settler at Howard Springs; Spencer, Eckles and Woodland preceded him. Spencer and Eckles went to Southern California. Eckles was county surveyor and a good one when he tried. But sometimes he did not even "step" the lines, but simply platted them on paper. L. H. Bell was an educated and careful surveyor.

The first building at Howard Springs was a log school house. Elijah Frost taught in it. He was once a member of the legislature. About a dozen tracts of land were granted to him; all contiguous. The first entry was for ten acres, and it included the spring, which was called Frost's Spring. It was named Howard Spring by L. H. Bell. Elijah Frost was the father of White, Winter, Severe and several other kinds of Frost; also of Mrs. Baker-Gibson and Mrs. John Walker. Geo. F. Jackson never lived at Howard Springs, but in the First District and at Pleasant Hill. His sister, Miss Annetta, was "Lady Principal" of the Academy, and, later, conducted a school in Georgia. John A. Jackson, of Michigan, opened up a farm at Howard Springs. He returned to his native state; then went to Kansas.

Samuel Cline moved here from Bremen, Indiana, in 1870 and located a saw mill at Howard Springs. He later bought the farm now owned by Isaac Beason at Northville. He run the saw mill and a store and also conducted the postoffice there for several years. About 1890 he moved to Crossville and built the house where he now lives. He is now in his 87th year and is remarkably strong for his years. His children: J. S., Geo. W., S. T., and S. C. Cline all live in the county as does one of his daughters, Mrs. S. C. Bishop. The other daughter, Mrs. S. C. Brown, lives at Athens.

Hubbard and Abbott went to Rheu county and started the town of Grandview. It is on the mountain. About a year ago there was a letter from and picture of A. A. Hubbard in the Chicago Inter-Ocean. He was nearly ninety years old. His whole life had been extremely temperate. He made a sketch of a local option petition. Then a petition and bill was prepared by L. H. Bell, and 200 copies were printed. Nearly 30,000 names were said to have been signed to it. It passed both houses of the legislature, but the governor did not sign it. It was printed by the Knoxville Chronicle, and a believed to be the first temperance petition printed in the South. That was in 1877.

W. W. Powell was not the first one to bring good farming tools to the county. John W. Dodge came from Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1846. He had bronchitis and was sent here by Mr. Hall, editor of Hall's Journal of Health. He and his married sons started a settlement, which he named Pomona, in honor of the Goddess of fruits and flowers.

Howard Springs was named jointly for John Howard, the philanthropist, and O. O. Howard, U. S. A., the temperance general.

Mr. Dodge had a fine apple orchard and nursery. His fruit took premium at the state fairs. De Labernies joined him as neighbors. Mr. Dodge was an excellent artist. Some of his miniature portraits are strictly first class. He painted portraits of Henry Clay, Jeff Davis and others. When his physician told him that he would not recover from an attack of pneumonia, he said, "Can't you keep me up long enough to finish this portrait?" Mr. and Mrs. Dodge, and Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Smith, their daughter, are in the Pomona cemetery.

Mr. Ward and family lived at what is now the Leggett or Lemert place. They moved to East Tennessee. All of the Pomona settlement people came before the civil war; and were scattered by it.
